Scandinavians in The U. S.

From Winchester Star

With the spread of the war to Scandinavia, the large contribution Denmark, Norway and Sweden have made to the population of the United States may be noted. Census figures have classified the foreign-born in the population, by countries of origin, without attempting to give the number of foreign descent.

The totals who were born in the three Nerse countries have not changed much in forty years. The figures are 1,067,667 in 1900; 1,178,595 in 1920; 1,122,576 in 1930. The division of Danes, Norwegians and Swedes has remained practically the same during these years. In 1930, it was Danes 179,474; Norwegians 347,872; and Swedes 595,250.

The Scandinavian ranked as the seventh large foreign-born element in 1930. The round totals for the six leaders were: Great Britain and Ireland (including the Irish Free State) 2,146,000; Italy 1,790 000; Germany 1,600,000; Poland 1,268,000; Canada 1,278,000; Russia 1,153 000.

In considering probable effects of the present war developments on American politics and on mass public opinion, these limited data are undoubtedly to be multiplied several times to allow for the near descendance of the foreign-born. Americans by the tens of thousands are directly concerned and deeply moved as Denmark is seized by Germany, as Norway goes into the war and as Sweden is gravely threatened.

The Poles and 500,000 foreign-born Czechs and Slovaks form other elements whose countries were extinguished by Nazi Germany. And in the United States there are 150,000 native Finns, embittered by their homeland's fate at the hands of Hitler's ally, Stalin.

Origins disregarded. Americans' sympathies lie with the small nations. An moving against Scandinavia, Hitler surely offends a large component of American population and makes an aggression which further alienates by far that which is the dominant public opinion of the country.

THE WAR, AS IT SEEMS TO US FROM THIS DISTANCE

From this distance, it seems to us that the best way to forestall German invasion of Holland, Belgium or Rumania, is to keep the Germans occupied in Norway. Immediate repossession of Norway by the Allies would cause such a blow to German military prestige as to force an effort against one or more of the three neutrals mentioned above, or even large waves of bombing attacks against British industrial centers. We are writing from a great distance, and with meagre details of the situation, but we believe that gradual repossession of Norway instead of a dramatic swoop, has its advantages. The longer Germany is forced to struggle with maintaining supply lines to Norway, the greater the long- term weakening of Nazi naval strength and the less likely a swift blow somewhere else. When and if Germany has to withdraw her Norwegian expedition it will on the announced excuse that Allied threats on one of the above-mentioned neutrals make a German "protectorate" necessary, and that the Nazi have achieved their mission of making Norway unable to send further materials to the Allies. Count on Goebbels to "prove" a victory, regardless of what happens. However, we think of nothing more favorable to Britain, than an extended naval campaign.

Philosophy of Fishing

Fredericksburg Free-Lance Star

The world's most famous thinker on fishing and its philosophy was doubtless Isaak Walton, who lived in England about 30 0 years ago. Fishermen who will soon be departing for their favorite streams and lakes might well give a thought to this renowned man, who has dignified for all time the sport which they love.

Walton wrote a book called, in the quaint spelling of those days: "The Compleat Angler." T o his mind fishing was no mere boy's play, but a fine art. Said he: "Is it not an art to deceive a trout with an artificial fly. A trout that is more sharp sighted than a hawk, and more watchful and timorous. He that hopes to be a good angler must not only bring an inquiring, searching, observant wit, but he must bring a large measure of hope and patience."

"When God intended to reveal future events or high notions to his prophets," said Walton," he carried them either to the desert or the seashore, that having separated them from the press of the people and business, and the cares of the world he might settle their minds in a quiet repose, and there make them fit for revelation." He, according to Walton, when the fisherman sits by the river or the lake, he finds the quietest, and fittest place for contemplation, which reflection is likely to be highly useful.

That may seem high flown talk, yet countless men have been enabled by just this quiet use of time to see their daily lives in a clearer light.

While they were meditating whether yon gamy trout was best to be enticed by a worm or a fly, their minds rested from the anxious contemplation of their daily cares. They went back to their work and home life with a clearer mind, and became more effective as their daily task.

Are Farmers Interested?

From Eastern Shore News

It may come as a surprise to most of the farmers in this section to be told by Milo Perkins, president of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, that more than 4,000,000 families-- or 14 per cent of our population-- in 1935-37 had an average income of only $312 for the year. There were more than 8,000,000 other families-- 27.5 per cent of the population-- who had an average income of $738. And there were nearly 7,000,000 families-- 23 per cent of the total-- who had an average income of $1,224 a year, or about $100 a month.

In other words, nearly two-thirds of our families had incomes of less than $1,000, and the average was only $826 a year-- $69 a month for the whole family. That's the story of under consumption in one figure.

The 14 per cent with the lowest incomes are spending slightly more than $1 per person per week for food. When the average income rises from $312 to $738 a year, the weekly food expenditure rises to $1.32.

Tobacco Pests Arriving

Tobacco flea beetles are already emerging from winter quarters in fence rows and woods, says S. B. Fenne, State pathologist, Virginia Extension Division, and they have already done considerable damage in several counties. Also, North Carolina reports the appearance of blue mold in three southern counties.

Tobacco growers who plan to use the paradichrobenzine treatment for blue mold can wait until blue mold appears in their plant beds, but those who are depending on a spray program to control this disease, should start spraying just before blue mold reaches their localities. The arrival of blue mold in Virginia is still in the future, however, and right now the most important problem is control of flea beetles, Fenne says.

Damage from beetles, or "tobacco flies," has been greatest in plant beds that are not tightly walled and covered. Proper protection of the plant beds is the first important measure. Improperly protected beds let adult beetles in, where they lay eggs in large numbers just under the surface of the ground. The eggs hatch in about a week and the young (small worms) do great damage to the plant roots. In another week or 10 days larvae turn to beetles that attack the plant above ground. The injury usually be found around the outer edges of plant beds, since incoming adults lay most o f their eggs there.

If covering and walls are tight, adults should not get in; but where they have entered, and where damage is found, the next step is to dust the plant bed with 1 per cent rotenone dust. Use it at the rate of 1-2 pound to 100 square yards. Repeat in about four days and until control is effected. A small hand duster will make satisfactory application; and if the canvas is dry, the dust can be applied through the canvas.

Fenne also recommends a heavy application of dust (1 pound to 100 square yards) just before pulling.

"Build-Up" Good News For Suffering Women

Much of women's periodic distress may be unnecessary!

Many who suffer from headaches, nervousness, cramp-like pain, other symptoms of functional dysmenorrhea due to malnutrition are helped by CARDUI.

Main way it helps relieve periodic distress is by increasing appetite and flow of gastric juice. Thus it often aids digestion; helps build strength, energy, resistance to periodic disturbances.

Others find help for periodic discomfort this way: Start a few days before and take CARDUI until "the time" has passed. Women have used CARDUI more than 50 years.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT BEER AND BREWING

100 INDUSTRIES BENEFIT FROM BEER AND ALE
Did you know that the return of beer and ale brought increased business to more than 100 industries? It did. Services and materials were needed. New jobs were made for workers.

WHY BEER IS THE BEVERAGE OF MODERATION
Beer's alcoholic content is very low... lower than any other alcoholic beverage. That is why it is called "the beverage of moderation." You are not likely to get in trouble if you stick to beer.

OLDER THAN THE PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT
Beer has been brewed since the beginnings of recorded history in many parts of the world. It was known in ancient Egypt, in China, and the Euphrates valley.

NATURE MAKES BEER!
A simple natural process produces beer and ale from water, malted grain and hops. The brewer applies his skill to blending these beverages their fine taste.

BOUGHT BY BEER AND ALE: 25 BILLION POUNDS OF FARM PRODUCTS. Steadily, year after year, the brewing industry gives American farmers a big order for farm products. That's a help farmers appreciate.

"CLEAN-UP OR CLOSE-UP" A NEW PLAN TO PROTECT BEER RETAILING
One of the most interesting things about beer and ale is the brewing industry's program to keep retailing places clean. This program is now in effect in a number of states. It is being extended. We want you to know about it. Write for booklet. United Brewers Industrial Foundation, 19 East 40th St., New York, N. Y.

BEER'S TAXES— $1,000,000 A DAY—COULD PAY FOR GRAND COULEE DAM IN 106 DAYS

WPA Employment Policy Explained

The employment division of the W. P. A., with headquarters in Lynchburg, informs us that workers and superintendents on WPA projects have been remotified that workers who have had farm experience are expected to accept employment on farms at standard prevailing wages whenever it is available, even though the wages be below the W. P. A. security rate. This rule applies to any work that is available.

Farmers wishing to employ any individual working on WPA should notify the individual worker of the project superintendent. All workers who accept this private employment will at its termination be assigned again to a WPA project upon application.

A worker refusing to accept private employment at wages prevailing in his community will be immediately released from WPA employment and will not be re-employed until the period when the private employment would have been available is completed.

W. P. A. has always had this policy regarding release of workers for private employment. It is a policy of WPA not to give employment to needy persons only during times when private employment is not available to them in their own community.

Personal Service

By THAYER WALDO
(NicoClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

REYNOLD RAND gave himself over to the luxury of a nearleer. In fact, refusing it status as a full-fledged one is based upon purely technical grounds: he neglected to exhibit his contortional tour de force. Rather, he screened it with great care behind his open newspaper. Of course, that may have been all for the best; there was a lady seated opposite him at the breakfast table, and she chanced to be his wife.

"But my dear girl," he said, nothing but silk in the purr: "my dear, dear girl—how preposterous! Could you conceive of idiotic jealous suspicions in me, of all people? I engaged a bodyguard for you merely to ensure your complete protection and my peace of mind."

With an emphatic movement Irene Rand reached across and snatched the printed barricade from his hands.

"You," she stated in flat accusation, "are a triple distilled liar! In the last 10 years you've never given me a single thought when I wasn't right in the same room, and as few as possible then. You've gone and hired some horrible plug-ugly just to embarrass me so I won't go anywhere, all because in your vile imagination—"

"Pet," Reynold interrupted, suavely mild, "remember your blood pressure. Do you want the veins in your neck standing out when they take those close-ups today?"

Swift solicitous fingers fluttered to her throat, stroked it smoothingly. Reynold lit a fat cigar and continued:

"My motives, I can only repeat, are of the highest order. As a well-known star, you can't afford to ignore the current prevalence of kidnaping and robbery."

In the kitchen on their right sounded a buzz. The titular head of the house glanced around in an almost apprehensive fashion. Then he faced forward again, managing a careless smile.

"Ah, yes," he murmured; "that must be the chap now. I asked him to drop around this morning so you could meet him."

Irene gasped and began loudly:

"Reynold P. Rand, if you think I'm actually going to put up with this, you've daffy as hell and—"

Deftly he had risen and slipped through the swing door, leaving her aavidspeech. She sprang around the table, bolted after him—and then came to a halt just inside the dining room. Reynold's meager back was toward her, in the hallway, covering neck and more above him stood a great warrior-featured blond lad with gleaming teeth.

"Oh, Mr. Drake—Rey's just been telling me all about you. Do come in and sit down."

Both men faced her, one surprised, the other wearing a mask of cold politeness.

"How do you do, Mrs. Rand?" The tone was self-possessed and impersonal. "It's a pleasure to meet you. I've seen so many of your pictures."

His indifference brought an added thrill. Here indeed was novelty!

"Thank you," she said, leading him into the library. "Reynold, will you please call the studio and tell them I'll be a little late. Mr. Drake and I need to chat and get acquainted."

He came at nine that evening, looking monumental but even handsomer in dress clothes. Driving alone, they went to the Capitol club.

For an hour she enjoyed herself utterly.

Drake still would unbend but slightly. She was trying for the dozenth time to draw him into conversation when, several tables away, she suddenly glimpsed a familiar face, and started. Maurice! As she stared he saw her, evidently not for the first time. Elaborately he bowed; the accompanying smile was hard, ironic.

Quickly she glanced at her escort, and as instantly knew real excitement. He had seen, too! He was positively glaring in that direction. Irene leaned across the table to whisper:

"Never mind—he's probably tight. I never laid eyes on him before."

But it was futile; that seemed only to aggravate matters. With a bull-like growl deep in his young chest, Drake sprang up and was striding toward the offender, flats hugely doubled.

Shocked wonder checked her thoughts as she saw him charge straight past Maurice, heading for the table beyond. Then the towheaded giant pulled a man out of a chair, sent him down again with a right to the chin—and the withheld little shriek burst from Irene. Incredibly, the man Drake had punched was Reynold!

The next second or so she never recalled. She only knew that at last her bodyguard was standing before her again; that one enormous hand inexorably grasped the wrist of a tearful little thing with auburn hair.

"Sorry, Mrs. Rand," he said in a voice like avenging thunder, "but I'll have to leave you now, and I won't be coming back. It seems this stuff should begin at home, so from now on I'll be shadowing my wife."
